

Excerpt from the foreword: Whether or not we are a nation of readers is a topic of contemporary concern and debate. Surrounded as we are by electronic media and an endless variety of leisure-time possibilities. It is difficult for us to fathom how important the printed word was to earlier generations. But in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, books and reading were essential characteristics of American life. As historian Robert A. Rutland, editor of The Papers of James Madison, explains in his essay, books and the ideas conveyed by books were crucial to the founding of our nation. This volume, which also includes a surprisingly comprehensive list of books that Congressman James Madison thought were needed by the first national legislature, is published by the Center for the Book in the Library of Congress.
